“An Eventful Archaeology of Roman Crete”

By Prof Scott Gallimore, Wilfrid Laurier

Tuesday March 28, 2017 at 6:00 pm

Location: Anthropology Building AP130 19 Russell Street, Univ of Toronto

The history of the island of Crete under Roman rule, like many regions in the Mediterranean, often focuses on the impact of significant events. For Crete, the conquest of the island by Rome from 69-67 BCE and a series of destructive earthquakes between the fourth and sixth centuries CE serve as two examples. But how significant are these events when it comes to understanding social transformation? This talk will take the perspective of eventful archaeology to explore social transformation on Roman Crete and the stimuli that led to those changes.

Free lecture, all welcome. For more information see www.aiatoronto.ca
